PREFACE TO THE SECOND EDITION

A bibliography is never completed. Even in a limited field it is seldom possible to achieve the absolute: how much less so when the time-range is measured by centuries and the subject-range embraces a national literature. In the preface to my first edition I was frank to admit that "the present list is undoubtedly defective," and both correspondents and reviewers hastened to call various errors and omissions to my attention. I feel particularly indebted in this regard to Professor Lawrence M. Price for his scholarly review in the "JEGPh" 23 (1924): 114; to the late Professor J. G. Robertson of London for the just criticisms set forth in the "MLR" 18:509; to Paul van Tieghem, who pointed out in the "Revue de Synthèse Historique" a number of incorrect inclusions; also to numerous correspondents, among them Erwin G. Gudde, Lee M. Hollander, Leonard L. Mackall, Alec W. G. Randall, and G. Waterhouse. In London it was my privilege to examine a number of rare books in the library of the late Professor Robert Priebisch. To him I owe some identifications and also some additions to my list of translations. To all of these I hereby make grateful acknowledgments: definite improvements in the new edition are due to their help.

It was not long after the publication of the "Bibliography" that I began to plan a supplement to it: this soon came to seem not only necessary, but also desirable in a positive way. On the negative side, so to speak, the supplement was to embrace what our German colleagues, with admirable precision and succinctness, call "Berichtigungen und Nachträge." But the positive function of the supplement had an almost equal importance, though of a different nature. The old list ended with the year 1917, when translations from the German began to drop to the lowest figure they had known in more than eighty years. I was reluctant to leave the investigation in this phase: I felt a desire to trace the recovery of German after the World War -- so far as these data could reflect it -- confident that a decided upward trend would be revealed as an augury of a return to something like the conditions of the pre-war period. So the year 1927, with which the present edition ends, was chosen as completing a full decade after the entrance of the United States into the war.

The great bulk of the work on the proposed supplement was done at the Library of Congress, where I used the vast catalog in situ -- an enormous advantage, as I came to learn, and as most literary workers doubtless know. For not only has that catalog a completeness that no deposit catalog can possibly attain but it also contains thousands of cards printed by LC for books that are not housed in the Congressional Library; and, in addition to that, the printed cards bear innumerable hand-written bibliographical annotations. Among these I found one series that has come to alter, in one important respect, the arrangement of my book: the LC bibliographers have entered in writing on each card, where ascertainable, the German title of the original work. I not only incorporated this information in my revised lists but extended the principle to all the titles I have -- as far as this could readily be done -- and thus was led to adopt the plan of alphabetizing the works of a given author by the German titles, instead of by those of the translations. All told, I devoted a considerable amount of time to the determination of the original German titles; but I did not feel under obligation to complete this phase of the work, which might easily have led to an undue extension of my labors.

The work at LC subdivided itself into five major operations: (1) a check of every author and title of my book against the LC catalog; (2) a critical examination of every translation of which I could get the original; (3) a listing of the contents of all the available titles in my List C (Collections and Anthologies), as also of any other volumes of similar character in the main list or in List A (Anonyma); (4) a check of the entire list of translators against the LC catalog for possible further identification or dating; (5) a new line of investigation resulting in part from my musical interests. The Music Division of the LC, as is well known, has a collection of operas and operettas, unusually complete as to both scores and librettos. I went through the entire catalog of these and subsequently examined all the texts for which there was an original available. This added a considerable number of new entries (cf., e.g., Richard Wagner).

Further extension and some revision of the original lists resulted partly from the consultation of various special bibliographies, of which I found two particularly fruitful -- doctoral dissertations prepared at the University of Wisconsin under the direction of Professor Hohlfield involving a systematic search of the most important British magazines for material bearing on German-English literary relations in the broadest sense. A large number of translations were made known to me through the reviews or notices of them published in these periodicals (see B26 and B27).

Supplementary material dating from the postwar period (1918-27) was supplied in the main by the publishers' catalogs, AC and KC, both of which are now incomparably more complete and reliable than through most of the nineteenth century, the AC in particular having become an almost ideal bibliographical source-book. Entries taken down from these lists, however, were then checked against LC.

Having before me the voluminous data thus assembled, I proceeded to prepare, in the summer of 1929, the MS of my supplement, which ran to over three hundred typed pages.

All this time my labors had suffered from one major defect, kindly but emphatically pointed out by Professor Robertson in the review mentioned above and of course fully realized by myself. This was the fact that I had been able to consult the library of the British Museum only in absentia, so to speak, through the very imperfect medium of its printed catalogs. As the BM contains the largest collection of printed books in my field in the world, it had been a grievous disadvantage to me to be unable to spend an extended period of time there. There were some forty years of accessions of which I could have no direct knowledge, and also I could not actually see these books themselves -- a very important point, as the sequel proved.

The opportunity of remedying this situation was presented when I obtained a year's leave of absence for the year 1930-31 and set aside the autumn of 1930 for research in the British Museum. I very soon discovered, however, that my task was one of far greater magnitude than I had anticipated. I could have checked my own lists against BM without excessive expenditure of time; but I found that in order to be sure of having a record of all the accessions to the Library since the publication of its last catalog it would be necessary to read through the entire catalog once more. And if my task was to be completed along the lines on which I had begun it, I should wish to compare translation and original wherever both were available. It appeared that there were about 880 catalog volumes to be read, and probably at least 5,000 translations to be examined, before the ideal requirements of my undertaking could be regarded as satisfactorily met. Obviously I could not hope to manage all this in three months. In this emergency I called on my wife for help, and from September to Christmas we constituted a working organization such as the British Museum, I fancy, has rarely housed. She read the catalogs and made out the thousands of call slips required, while I passed the books themselves in critical if rapid review. Even so, the task remained an almost inhuman one, which I could not have finished in the allotted time if I had not foregone all indulgence in a lunch hour.

It is a pleasure to speak in this connection of the hearty co-operation which we enjoyed at the hands of the entire BM staff, and especially of the help and encouragement we derived from the Superintendent of the Reading-room, Mr. Arthur Ellis. Time and again I approached Mr. Ellis with requests which were rather unusual and in some cases doubtless went counter to the established routine of the library; and of course the extent of the service which the nature of our work necessitated was wholly abnormal. Never was a request refused, or even grudgingly granted; more than once the staff volunteered information as to how we could "beat the game." And in the end -- perhaps supreme evidence of the spirit of the entire institution -- our departure was accompanied by the sincere regrets of even those assistants whom we had chiefly burdened.

It is safe to say, I think, that the work done in the BM produced the chief contribution of the new edition. Not only did it result in innumerable new entries, thus enlarging and completing the total picture but it also enabled me to realize, with an efficiency of perhaps 90 per cent, my ideal of presenting a critical estimate of every translation listed. Moreover, a large number of identifications of anonymous publications, the ascription of unidentified translations, and the discovery of several hoaxes or piratings has increased the value of the book, while they added no little zest to the daily grind.

In view of the bulk of the new material presented, and in the light of certain objections to the arrangement of the original volume which have appeared in the course of its practical use, the proposal of a supplement yielded to that of a second edition which not only should revise and augment the first one but should supplant it. The relation of the second to the first edition may then be visualized under the figure of a river, already of considerable size, which has at length received an important tributary and now flows onward through an altered landscape, its waters increased by fully half their original bulk and thoroughly modified by the new admixture. Many minor changes, all of which I consider desirable, have been made in the new edition, and will not escape the attentive bibliographer and student. There has been no detail, however trivial, which has not been carefully considered in the light of the experiences which I and others have had in the use of the original volume. I am perfectly aware that there are still likely to be errors and omissions in my lists; but I hope and believe that in its present shape the book approaches the ideal which I had formed of it when I first began work on it in 1916.

The paragraphs to this point were written in September 1932, but fate willed that it should not be my last word on the subject. The great cost of printing a book of this character and size proved an insuperable obstacle at first, and for four years the MS lay fallow, as it were. When the winter of 1936-37 brought the hope that it might finally be published, it seemed unfortunate and in a sense indefensible to leave the listings with the year 1927, the more so that with the help of what a colleague has aptly termed "alphabet workers" (in this case they were Helmut Boeninger and Francis Werking, graduate students at the University of Wisconsin) AC and EC had been read for possible additions through the year 1933. Accordingly I determined to add the titles for the years 1928-1935 in a special supplement to be appended to the completed MS. Incorporation of the new entries in the previous lists would have been impossible because of the numbered sequence of those titles. As most of these more recent publications were inaccessible to me, it was possible to give critical estimates in only a very few cases. I have been at pains, however, to find the original German titles wherever I could, for which I hope users of the lists will be grateful; doubtful identifications are indicated by a prefixed question mark.

An attempt to count the entries for these years proved baffling, as the figure for 1928 came to 252 as compared with 157 for 1927. Even assuming that the upward trend from 1919 on had continued into 1928, there was nothing to account for so striking an increase. I came to the conclusion that the apparent difference was largely illusory and was due to the fact that in these years my count derived from the publishers' catalogs, whereas previously it had been chiefly determined by LC and BM; thus many titles were counted twice which in earlier years would have figured as one item. Under these circumstances, I could only use the annual totals to show the general trend, without reference to the preceding years. For the years 1928-1935 the annual totals are: 252, 271, 350, 306, 322, 261, 244, 279. This seems to indicate that the Hitler revolution disturbed the normal crescendo of the postwar period, causing the translations of 1934 to fall behind those of 1928. The year 1935, to be sure, forges ahead of 1929, perhaps presaging a resumption of the previous advance. But I say only perhaps, for it is hard to see how the future lines will run.

Indeed, it seems to me now that my work has come to its final stopping-place, beyond which there is no possibility of continuing on the road originally laid out for it. With the great dispersal of the German Jews and the banishment from the German book-trade of so much that it formerly included, the whole face of "German literature" has changed, if not forever, at least for our generation. Even for the years 1928-1935 it is difficult to assemble the materials that carry out the original plan; hereafter, in my judgment, it will be impossible.

All the more importance, then, attaches to the picture I have attempted to outline in these pages; for in a few years the very documents that contributed to it may be so scattered, if not actually destroyed, that these records will have the significance of a unique MS preserved for posterity by a fortunate accident.

A Critical Bibliography of GERMAN LITERATURE IN ENGLISH TRANSLATION
1481-1927

INTRODUCTION

The present volume is the culmination of studies which have extended over more than twenty years and which have already borne fruit in print ("Bibliography of German Literature in English Translation," University of Wisconsin Studies, 1922). It was in 1916 that the writer, reaching out for new scholarly worlds to conquer, asked Professor A. R. Hohlfield to suggest some line of investigation which might be consonant with his powers and his predilections. As all scholars who follow such matters know, Professor Hohlfield had long been deeply interested in the literature of translation as one phase of the general subject of Anglo-German literary relations and under his direction a number of ambitious bibliographical investigations have been undertaken and completed (M. H. Haertel, "German Literature in American Magazines 1846-1880"; S. H. Goodnight, "German Literature in American Magazines Prior to 1846"; Lucretia V. T. Simmons, "English Translations of Goethe's Lyrics Prior to 1850"; Stella M. Hinz, "English Translations of Goethe's Lyrics after 1860"; Lillie V. Hathaway, "German Literature of the Mid-nineteenth Century in England and America as Reflected in the Journals 1840-1914"). Studies tracing the echoes of German literature in British magazines are now approaching completion and still other studies are under way. Mention might also be made, in this connection, of the published investigations of Professor Lawrence M. Price, who has been studying for years the influence of English literature in Germany--upon the suggestion, and partly under the guidance, of Professor Hohlfield. Knowing my deep interest in the theory and practice of translation (I am the first, I think, to have offered a university course in the subject), Professor Hohlfield suggested that I undertake a study of the English translations from German literature published in book form, from the beginning of printing down to the present day. Neither of us, I am confident, had any clear conception of the great magnitude of the task involved. It seems doubtful to me now, viewing the weary road that has led to this point, whether I should have thought it possible that a single worker, virtually unaided, could travel it to the end.

The basic character of the bibliography was clearly visualized from the start. It was not to be a mere aggregation of titles, important as such a compilation would certainly be: the critical evaluation of the translations was to be one of the principal features of my work, and the one which I thought might be more widely appreciated than any other. My thought was to assist the scholar, the reader, the book-buyer, and the librarian to make intelligent selections from the mass of published translations. It was my hope that publishers intending to issue inexpensive series of foreign works in translation would find valuable hints in my pages; and I thought it possible that translators would consult them to find out what had not yet been translated into English, or at any rate not adequately. My lists, I am assured, have been diligently consulted by colleagues who conduct college courses in which students are assigned collateral reading in English and for whom it is extremely important to know whether or not a given translation is satisfactory. But aside from such practical considerations, I confess that I was much influenced by a purely theoretical one. It seems to me that there is something anomalous about an uncritical bibliography of any kind, i.e., one which should merely list names or titles without any scrutiny whatever; but the anomaly is even greater in the case of a list of translations. One hardly takes a translation in his hands without wishing to know something of its relation to the original; and yet it is impossible for the average person to obtain such information by himself.

My critical procedure in the present edition follows in general the lines laid down in the first. What I endeavored to ascertain, by an intensive if sometimes very brief examination of each translation for which an original could be found, was (1) if the translator was honestly striving for completeness and accuracy, and (2) how far he succeeded in achieving them. The first point was not infrequently settled by consultation of preface or introduction, in which the translator so often takes his readers into his confidence. There always followed, however, a careful comparison of some portion of the translation with the corresponding passage of the original. Experience showed that such a procedure rarely failed to reveal both the translator's competence and also what I may term his "will to accuracy." If a translator plays fast and loose with his original in the first paragraph, he is likely to do so in the last one; and, conversely, if he has the ability to render a single complex sentence into correct and idiomatic English, he is not likely to lapse into slovenly procedure at any time. An expert musician can tell by the opening chords of a composition whether or not it shows promise; long practice has given me something like a similar facility for apprehending the fundamental quality of a translator. At the same time, I should not wish to assign any absolute value to the judgments rendered here. All grading, as good teachers everywhere are well aware, is not only subjective, and hence liable to error, but also highly responsive to mood, fatigue, and other extraneous factors. In many cases I rendered judgment on the same translation at different times with identical result; but I must in candor confess that sometimes my judgment varied. On the other hand, I not infrequently found myself in disagreement with some critics whose judgments I had accepted for my first edition (in the case of works which I had not had a chance to examine myself), and so I came to the conclusion that errors could occur even when the critic took time for extended study of the translation in question. Some of the critical judgments which I took from others for the first edition (e.g., Baumann's of "Faust") I have retained; many others I have been able to replace by my own, thanks to my long sojourn at the British Museum. I was the more ready to do this in that the examination of the actual books necessitated in making critical evaluations proved to be the most interesting phase of the work--indeed, at times it even had an element of excitement, as when I made some "discovery" or other--and the one which chiefly enlivened the entire undertaking. Then these dead titles and names suddenly came to life and put on flesh and blood; and in the communion with their authors I felt the pulse of humanity.

The system of diacritical marks adopted for the first edition has proved to be both practical and useful, and has been retained in the present edition, with a reversion to the plan which I had originally set up but which the former printer could not follow. The asterisk (*) indicates excellence; it does not mean perfection, which is no more often attained in translation than in other fields of human endeavor, but implies that a reader may safely take a version so marked as a reasonably satisfactory rendering of the original. In many cases a word of comment appended to the bibliographical entry gives the sign a more specific meaning. Occasionally the double asterisk () is used to indicate unusually high quality. The section mark (§) is somewhat more negative in character; it says in effect: I have examined this translation and find it neither wholly good nor wholly bad. Expressed in terms of examination grades, it represents the rank between B and C. In a collection of lyrics, such a mark means that you may find a very good or even excellent version here and there but you cannot be sure of doing so consistently, for the bulk of them are in some way or other defective.

The dagger (†) is comparable to the inverted thumb in the ancient Coliseum, and its interpretation leads to a brief consideration of those qualities that constitute merit in a translation. Every work of literary art has two component elements: substance and form. By substance I mean the entire subject matter in its fullest extent, including shades of meaning, connotations, imagery, and the like. The true appreciation of the entire substance of a piece of writing calls for an intimate knowledge of the foreign tongue as well as a thorough acquaintance with the life and customs and literature of the people who speak it. Strangely enough, it is weakness in substance that most often betrays the otherwise skilled translator and that necessitates adverse criticism of such talented men as Bowring, Lytton, and Mangan. Is the modern world growing more modest? Or is it only a passing fashion that dictates the restrictions on translators' license? At all events, it is perhaps not too much to say that Pope's "Iliad" would be unthinkable in our day, both in its inception and its popularity: people would say, if such a work actually found a publisher, "It's a fine poem, but not Homer." -- Cf. my comment on Rossetti's "translation" of Bürger's "Lenore." It is the writer's conviction that nothing but the consciousness of innate genius can justify the translator in altering the substance of his original (except in the way of expurgation, which demands a chapter all its own), and few versions are commended in this book which are known to tamper with the substance of their sources.

On the stylistic side, I am particularly impatient with translators who insist on "improving" their author, at least if he is a writer of real distinction and of individuality. On the other hand, I concede that there may be justification in pruning a verbose original or in reducing bulk to suit a different taste; and I also make a distinction between works of purely literary appeal and those in which an informational purpose is much to the fore. In all cases known to me, I have indicated in my appended comments the extent to which the translation aims to reproduce the original work. The question mark (?) prefixed to a German title indicates that the "translation" bears little or no relation to the supposed original.

That mere dictionary "faithfulness" will not turn the trick, to be sure, is amusingly illustrated by the following choice example from a little work by L. W. Schaufuss on Correggio's "Träumende Magdalona," and evidently translated by a perspiring German with the most literal help of such dictionary as he may have had:

"The slightly sensual features still impressed upon their charming appearance and admixed to their penance -- combined with the deep excitement of the mind, which mark the aspect of the Magdalene's, generally speaking, bestows to them a surpassing picturesque character, and no master did succeed more perfectly to express the same, as Correggio."

The quality of form is much less tangible, but for that very reason is not seldom caught unconsciously. It includes not only meter, of course, but all those imponderable elements of word choice and sentence arrangement that we conveniently call style. A writer's style can be, for example, ponderous without being heavy, light without being insipid, fluent without being verbose, archaic without being crabbed. It is the translator's highest function to apprehend such qualities in the original and pass them on to the reader of his version. In general, I believe, such a result is best attained by an intelligent fidelity to the outward form of the original work. This opinion is strikingly confirmed by the injunctions written by Count Hermann Keyserling to the translator of his celebrated "Reisetagebuch eines Philosophen" (which I make bold to translate!):

"I worked for seven long years on my travel-diary, and there is not a word and not a comma in it whose meaning and position have not been carefully considered. No one will pardon the translator who does not achieve his task with the unconditional reverence for his original, and with the absolute devotion to a great cause, that Carlyle showed with respect to Goethe....[Translate] with strict literalness, word for word, and comma for comma.... Under no circumstances whatever put in an 'and' that is not in the original (every 'and' you inserted I have had to strike out); adhere closely to my commas, semicolons, and periods; do not under any circumstances connect sentences which I separated; and remember in all cases that in me you have to do with a severe, dynamic, concentrated essence which will not suffer the slightest dilution or slackening in style.... Consider further that the transfer of a German melody to an English one, which we once discussed orally, can only be understood in this sense, that my exact cadence, my rhythm, my melody should be set to English words, not that anything else should be put in its place."¹

¹For the benefit of those who read German readily, I quote the philosopher's own words: "An meinem Reisetagebuch habe ich volle sieben Jahre gearbeitet, und es steht kein Wort und kein Komma darin, dessen Sinn und Ort nicht genau bedacht wären. Niemand wird dem Uebersetzer je verzeihen, der seine Arbeit nicht mit der unbedingten Ehrfurcht vor dem Originaltext und mit der absoluten Hingebung an eine grosse Sache geleistet hätte, welche Carlyle Goethe gegenüber bewies... [Uebersetzen Sie] strikt wörtlich, Wort für Wort, und Komma für Komma... Bringen Sie unter gar keinen Umständen ein 'und' an, das nicht im Originaltext stünde (jedes von Ihnen gesetzte 'und' habe ich ausstreichen müssen), halten Sie sich peinlich genau an meine Kommata, Semikolons und Punkte, ziehen Sie unter gar keinen Umständen Sätze zusammen, die ich getrennt habe und bedenken Sie überall, dass Sie es in mir mit einem strengen, dynamischen, konzentrierten Geist

Granted that there is more than a trace of affectation here, and that Keyserling's injunctions cannot safely be followed in toto in all cases (e.g., as to punctuation and "word-for-word" rendering), the basic doctrine is sound and should be taken to heart by every young translator.

The dagger (+), then -- to revert to our diacritical marks -- indicates a gross violation of one of these principles (commonly both), and may be succinctly interpreted as "negligible," or "highly unreliable."

In passing I may remark that there are certain fields in which a high excellence is almost uniformly attained. They are those in which the translator has some other than a purely commercial interest in his work, or is moved by other forces than publication vanity, for instance. Thus I find that the philosophers, in general, have been very competently rendered, of course with variations; that sectarian publications are usually translated with great care and seriousness; that many writings of the socialist leaders have been almost flawlessly done; and that the psychoanalysts and the theosophists, in our own day, have enjoyed similar benefits. In all these cases, to be sure, it was more a question of substance than of style; and Nietzsche, the stylist, has suffered more than some other philosophers in translation; but it is clear to me that we could have better translations if we cared to demand them.

A further distinguishing characteristic of this bibliography, in addition to the critical one, has only gradually emerged in my thinking about it, partly as a result of certain friendly criticisms of the first edition. For the first time, I believe, an entire national literature is here seen through the distorting medium of another language; and the resulting picture, as has been clearly realized by students everywhere, is totally different from that given by the histories of literature or indeed any other critical source. For this reason I have insisted on retaining in the second edition all the material that my chosen field could possibly embrace. This not only applies to separate titles but extends to reissues or re-printings of a given book as an index to its popularity. It has been objected that it is not possible to achieve absolute completeness in this matter and hence that the data given by me are, if not valueless, at least much reduced in importance. In spite of the actual limitations of my lists, which I concede, I still think the principle a correct one, and believe that my listing of all the editions I could trace may come to have some little value in the future. For I conceive of the possibility that at some time there will be studies made of the history of literature from a new angle. Investigators will endeavor to draw a picture of the progress of writing as reflected by the popularity of authors and their works, seeking thus to secure an image of the soul of the people who had read or at least bought these books. A similar consideration seems to me to hold good with respect to this bibliography. Is there no significance in the abnormal popularity of Luise Mühlbach's novels, for instance, in America and not in England? Does not the course of the vogue of Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury," or "Münchhausen's adventures, or the "Swiss family Robinson," as shown by the dates of their zu tun haben, der nicht die leiseste Verdünnung und Entspannung des Stils verträgt...Bedenken Sie weiter, dass die Uebersetzung der deutschen Musik in englische, von der wir damals mündlich sprachen, doch nur so zu verstehen sein kann, dass mein genauer Takt, mein Rhythmus, meine Melodie nun englisch erklänge, nicht dass irgent etwas anderes an seine Stelle gesetzt werden dürfte."

reissues, suggest interesting speculation with regard to the buyers and potential readers of these works at different periods of time? I cherish the hope that the very completeness of my lists (not fully realized, I am quite aware) will be one of their chief contributions to future investigations in this field. The following pages fairly bristle with suggestions for interesting socio-literary studies, and might well be taken as a starting point for some of them. Certainly I have the distinct feeling that the principle of indiscriminate inclusion was vital in a work which aimed not so much to present conclusions as to furnish source material on which further study could be based. As it stands, then, the book takes its place among those fundamental compilations out of which, in course of time, a complete and accurate picture of Germany as seen through English eyes can be drawn.

This leads me to a consideration of one problem which arose at the very outset of the work, and which continued to clamor for a solution up to the very end--the definition of the term "literature" as used in my title. It seemed proper to interpret it liberally; but the question of the place to draw the line was never satisfactorily answered, and it is not improbable that some titles have been lost beyond recall as a result of a restricted plan which gave way to a more liberal one a week later--for consistency is surely one of the most elusive virtues. Gradually something like a defensible scheme evolved, and "literature" became defined as "humane letters." The book now aims to include the following: essays, travel and description, German history and biography, history of German literature, history of Greece and Rome, history and theory of art and music, aesthetics, philosophy, and personal letters. In general, the idea was to list those books which are most likely to be consulted, not for professional advantage or information, but for their cultural value and the aesthetic pleasure they may afford. For this reason, historical monographs of a highly technical nature were generally excluded, as well as all technical works dealing with the natural sciences--though here it was not always easy to distinguish between technical treatises and popular treatments intended for the lay reader. On other grounds, sermons and other purely edifying literature were not systematically listed, the citations from Luther, for example, being almost exclusively biographical--his table-talk, his letters. An exception, however, was made in favor of hymns, which so often conform to the highest standards of literary art. It should also be said that the principle of exclusion was less rigidly applied with respect to the eighteenth century and earlier periods, where the historical interest of the entry might outweigh other considerations.

A further problem of inclusion or exclusion grew out of the fact that Germans have not always used their mother tongue. The German nun Hrotsuitha composed her plays in Latin; the Prussian king Frederick II wrote his voluminous works in French. On the other hand, a perfectly good German like Holbach became practically a Frenchman and like Frederick wrote in French. Should one include Holbach as racially German? or should one exclude Hrotsuitha and Frederick as linguistically non-German? My decision was to consider Latin or French as without weight if they were the medium of expression of a writer whose environment and racial adherence were German, and my lists contain not a few items translated from those languages. Holbach, on the other hand, I considered to have lost his claim to be regarded as a German author.

The titles contained in the following pages are derived in the main from four great catalogs: (1) British Museum (consulted on the spot for the second edition; see my Preface, and including the special Catalog of Music). (2) Library of Congress (examined for the most part on the spot, and including the so-called Old Catalog--see below--and the special catalog of the Music Division). (3) The American (Publishers') Catalog, including the earlier bibliographies of Roorbach and Kelly. And (4) the English (Publishers') Catalog. For a list of special bibliographies consulted, see List B, p. 574. The method of search was a simple if very time-consuming one: I went through each list from beginning to end, stopping at each name that looked German, and examining the titles under it to see if any were translations. In preparing the first edition, I had some help on the BM catalog; for the second edition, my wife read the entire BM catalog; all the rest of this search was done by myself. Such a method has at least three disadvantages: first, it makes the compilation of anonymous works largely a matter of chance; second, it loses sight of MS material almost entirely; and, third, it is open to serious error due to fatigue or wandering attention of the reader. But there is no other method to be pursued, and the disadvantages are in part counteracted, in part unimportant. Anonymous and MS material is rarely of high value, so that its loss could be viewed with resignation. Gaps, on the other hand, had a fair chance of being detected in the process of going over the same ground in another catalog. Special bibliographies did their share in eliminating error and furnishing additional information. I regret in this connection the fact that Charles Evans's monumental bibliography of early Americana has not advanced further toward completion, since the volumes now in print gave me a number of new entries. In general, the field of periodical literature is not covered here, and completeness was attempted only as far as books and pamphlets are concerned. However, I have not hesitated to include translations of entire plays, short stories, and other substantial items, if they came to my attention.

In the preface to my first edition I wrote: "Probably few persons will pick up this volume without a feeling of amazement at the extent of its contents...." I feel in duty bound to caution the student who may casually compare the second edition with the first against the assumption that the surplus of over 4000 entries shown by the former represents so many accessions to the original compilation. While a very large number of new titles have been added, plus a considerable number of later editions of works already listed, a great many of the new numbers are due to a different method of arranging successive issues of the same work. Thus the actual growth of the bibliography is perhaps nearer 50 than 75 per cent -- which is, however, a very substantial figure, after all, and might well justify the preparation of the new edition. Part of the accretion, of course, is due to the publications of the years 1918-1927; another considerable number resulted from the inclusion of certain works not taken into the first edition: e.g., Bogatzky's "Golden Treasury," the "Adventures of Münchhausen," and Caxton's translation of "Reynard the Fox."

It will be of interest to pass in brief review the chronology of my findings, which forms the basis of Chart I p. 8. The earliest translation listed in the first edition was dated 1509; my decision to include Caxton's translation of "Reynard the Fox" (see my note to "Reineke Fuchs," List A) carries us almost thirty years

GERMAN BOOKS INTO ENGLISH, 1500-1927

Data for "Total" are on an annual basis, considerably compressed for the years 1500 to 1750. The total given for any period--i.e., 1501-1600, 1601-1700, 1701-1750, 1751-1760, and up to 1791-1800--has been divided by the number of years involved. From 1801, when annual data became available, five-year moving averages (averages of five-year periods shifting one year at a time) were made to smooth out the extreme annual fluctuations.

Data for "Goethe" are totals for the decade in the center of which each point is plotted. In the original data the last point was a total for the period 1921-1927; this figure was divided by seven and multiplied by ten, making it comparable with preceding data. Leaving the Goethe data as ten-year totals is equivalent to plotting average yearly figures on a scale expanded ten times, and facilitates comparison with the "Total" line.

farther back toward the beginnings of printing, for the famous English version of Reynard's escapades and adventures, which forms the basis for the great majority of all treatments of that beast-epic in English, was printed by William Caxton in 1481. But the real stream of translations, flowing rather thinly to begin with, sets in only with the sixteenth century; and here the earliest item is Barclay's celebrated version in 1509 -- really a very able adaptation -- of Sebastian Brant's "Narrenschiff," in both languages one of the most interesting documents of its day and age. Another translation, done by Thomas Watson and published as a second edition in 1517, may possibly be the same as that noted by Goedeke as having been done from the French in 1507 (I have no bibliographical data for this work). Barclay's translation, by the way, achieved reprints, according to Goedeke, in 1570 and 1590; but I have not seen them. The next earliest publication is Hieronymus Braunschweig's treatise on surgery, in 1525; and I have also included in the present edition the following works by the same author: "The vertuous boke of Distyllacyon...of herbes," published in two different editions in 1527, and the "Homish apothecarye," published in 1561. The pranks of Eulenspiegel begin their march through English lands with two editions of the same translation, probably antedated by BM as 1528 and 1530, after which there is no record of another issue for more than a century. In 1537 there is a theological disputation by one Alexander Alesius, "professor of theology at Leipzig," the first of a great number of writings of similar character. Something like a "best seller" among sixteenth-century translations is "A comparison betweene the Olde learyngye and the Newe" by Urbanus Rhegius, translated by Wylliam Turner, Dean of Wells, and published in 1537, with a reissue in the following year and a corrected and augmented edition ten years later.

The next item in chronological order is by Heinrich Bullinger, who has no less than eleven numbers to his credit, four of them being issues of his discussion of "The Christen state of matrimony, wherein housbandes and wyfes maye lerne to kepe house together with loue" (perhaps no easier to do in that day than at present); these came out in 1541, 1543, and 1552. Of Bullinger's more theological treatises, particular interest attaches to his "Confutation of the Pope's bull...against Elizabeth...queene of England," 1574, also to his "Most necessary and fruitfull Dialogue, betwene the seditious Libertin or rebel Anabaptist (Simon), and the true obedient Christiā (Ioiada)," published in 1551. The first echoes of the Gorman Reformation come into my list in connection with Philipp Melancthon, whose "Very godly defense...defending the marriage of prelates...sent unto the Kyng of England, Henry the eight," was published in 1541. Another communication to King Henry, possibly containing the same matter, appeared in 1547.

Two writings dealing with Luther may also be mentioned: Melancthon's funeral oration, published in 1546, and his "History of the lyfe and actes of M. Luther," published in 1561. A sort of political manifesto, urging concerted action on the part of Christendom against the Turks, written by T. Bibliander, came out in 1542. The year 1545 brings out the first translation from Agrippa von Nettesheim, a writer who had much more vogue in the seventeenth century than in his own; this is his "Commendation of matrimony." His work "On the vanitie and uncertaintie of artes and sciences" appeared in 1569, with a reissue in 1575, and was retranslated in 1676.

to be again reissued in 1694. Two of his other works appealed especially to the seventeenth century, one achieving three, the other four, editions. One was his occult philosophy, first issued in 1651 and then, in a different translation, in 1655 and 1665; the other was his "Glory of women...declaring the excellency and preheminance of Women above Men," which saw four editions from 1652 to 1683, and was, oddly enough, revived once more in a fresh rendering in 1873. Justus Jonas's "True hystorye of the Christen departynge of...D. Martyn Luther," including Melanchthon's oration, came out in 1546. Another writer on matrimony was Wolfgang Meuslin, called Musculus, whose treatise was published in 1548 and reissued in 1550. His "Common places of Christian religion" also went through two editions, 1563 and 1578. Martin Bucer's "Gratulation...unto the church of England for the restitution of Christes religion" was published in 1549, and his treatise on the distribution of alms in 1557. His death at the stake is narrated in a treatise published in 1562. It is of interest that Bucer's "Judgement...concerning divorce, written to Edward the Sixth," was "Englisht" by John Milton in 1644.

An early German chronicler is Johann Carion, whose "Three boke of chronicles" were issued in English in 1550, with an appendix, by Johann Funcke of Nurembergh, covering world events from 1532 to 1550. This begins the long and honorable line of German historians whose works have been translated into English. Another pioneer is Sebastian Muenster, who inaugurates in English translation the field of travel, exploration, and geography which evidently had a perennial appeal for English readers; a selection from Muenster's "Cosmography" entitled "A treatyse of the newe India" came out in 1553, and a collection of extracts from that work appeared in 1572 and was reissued in 1574. Myconius's life of Zwingli, another echo of the Reformation on the Continent, appeared in 1561.

The celebrated Bishop of Ratisbon, Albertus Magnus, was not to find a translator until the seventeenth century; but a spurious work assigned to him, "The boke of secretes of Albartus Magnus," evidently a treatise on magic, came out in 1565. Two interesting Latin poems by Thomas Kirchmeyer, called Naageorgus, were translated by B. Googe and published in 1570, or thereabouts; one is entitled "Spiritual husbandrie," the other is "The popish kingdom or reigne of Antichrist," which was reprinted in 1880. Ludwig Lavater's treatise "Of ghostes and spirites walking by nyght..." was published in 1572 and reissued in 1596. Another traveler found an English public in 1575, when the (Latin) accounts of Hieronymus Turlerus were published as "The traveiler of Jerome Turler." Two years later we have "A Christian confession taken from the last will and testament of Friedrich III," Kurfürst von der Pfalz, called der Fromme. A further oddity is the "Declaration made by the archbishop of Collen [i.e., Gebhard, Truchsess von Waldburg] upon the deede of his marriage," published in 1583.

The year 1592 marks the first appearance in English of the story of Faust -- a narrative which was to prove the most lastingly popular of all the early German "Volksbücher." Possibly the same B. Googe who translated Kirchmeyer's poems also turned his hand to popular science (i.e., magic?) in his translation of a treatise by one Anton Bertholdus on "The wonderful and strange effect of a new Terra Sigillata lately found out in Germanie," published in 1587. New to this edition is "A breife and learned treatise...of the Antichrist" by G. Sohn, "professor at Heidelberg," published in 1592.

The celebrated Paracelsus, from whose works the seventeenth century witnessed a considerable number of English translations, barely comes in at the end of this period with a couple of items. The entertaining story of "Fortunatus," which bulks large among the old English chapbooks, makes its first appearance in English dress in Thomas Dekker's comedy of "Olde Fortunatus" (see A161) in the year 1600. The same year very probably saw another odd anonymous publication, entitled "The vertuous Scholehous of ungracious women (see A518).

The seventeenth century furnishes us in the new edition with nearly twice as many entries as the sixteenth (108 as against 50), some of which merely continue names or works which we have already encountered. Thus I have versions of "Faust" (11), "Fortunatus" (4) "Reineke Fuchs" (11), and additional translations from Agrippa von Nettesheim (9) and Paracelsus (9), whose work was clearly regarded in the light rather of magic than of science. We may take a somewhat similar view of the translations (5) from Basilius Valentinus, who sought to find the "philosopher's stone." To the speculative tendency of the seventeenth century the mystical works of Jakob Boehme evidently appealed strongly, for we have no less than 25 items under his name in the space of about fifty years. Of Albertus Magnus there are three genuine and two spurious works in this century. The excitement of travel is vicariously afforded by the writings of Martin Baumgarten, Adam Brand, Bernhard von Breydenbach, Hermann Kirchner, Johann von Mandelslo, Adam Olearius, Leonhard Rauwolf, and Johannes Scheffer. Alchemy and magic are further represented by Johann Andreae, with his "Hermetick romance, or the chymical wedding," and by Johann Glauber -- whose name is incidentally used as cover for a sharply satirical attack upon the whole field of alchemy (see #2336). Religious and mystic speculation is found in the writings of Johann Gerhard, Philipp Nicolai ("Prophesie of Doomsday"), and G. Pictorius ("The nature of spirits"). Natural "science of a popular character is represented by Konrad von Gesner's "Historie of foure-footed beastes;" a truly delightful work. Contemporary history of a kind figures in "Lachrymae Germaniae" (A202), in Georg Weckherlin's description of the "Triumphall shewes set forth lately at Stutgart," 1616, and in "The relation of the death of (Wallenstein)," 1634. Additional items of more or less interest are a commemorative oration by Henricus Alting; the "Living Librerie of Philipp Camerarius, which had two editions; Friedrich Dedekind's "Grobianus," tr. in 1605 as "The schoole of slovenrie, or Cato turned wrong side out," and over a hundred years later as "Grobianus or the compleat booby"; two letters from the Great Elector in the interest of political affairs; the first English edition of Martin Luther's "Table-talk," a really admirable rendering, which came into existence in an almost miraculous manner; and a "Goodly disputacion" by Hans Sachs, who by the way has found very little echo in English-speaking countries until recently. At the end of the century there are three translations from Samuel Pufendorf, one of the first important writers on what we should now call political science.

The first three decades of the eighteenth century show no advance over the seventeenth: they furnish only 30 entries in all, or somewhat less, on the average, than the previous century; nor is this surprising, for there was little in the German literature of that time that was likely to appeal to English readers. Nine of the 30 entries are due to Pufendorf and two to Leibniz, while some of the others derive from reissues of "Eulenspiegel," "Faust," and "Reineke Fuchs." Only with the fourth decade does the tide set in more strongly: we have 23 entries between 1730 and 1741, and 42 in the following decade. After that the general course of translation can be followed in Chart I, on which I comment below. Up to 1750 there is little of significance. There are new editions of "Faust," "Fortunatus," and "Reineke Fuchs," and the names of Baumgarten, Dedekind, Leibniz, Mandelslo, Pufendorf, and Rauwolff recur. German hymnology begins to loom up, with 9 entries before 1750. New in this edition is the name of Baron von Poellnitz, whose memoirs give us 13 numbers in this period -- they mark the beginning of the scandal-mongering which the 18th century loved. Not far removed from this field are the Memoirs of Marie Countess Königsmarck, which also come in here. The name of Francis Baron Trenck reminds us of that more celebrated personage whose history will come to our attention in the next half-century. Frederick II, King of Prussia, also makes his first very modest appearance in this period. Other names which I need not dwell upon, but which may be mentioned for completeness' sake, are: August Francke, Peter Kolb, Lorenz Lange, Johann Maseov, J. J. Rambach, Philipp von Reck, Philipp Stralenberg, and Zacharias Wagener. Two oddities, finally, may be noted as belonging to the fifth decade of the century: an anonymous pamphlet called "The groans of Germany" (A202), which ran through six editions in the year 1741 and did not appear again; and a curious little work by "Baron Huffumbourghausen," called "The congress of the beasts" (#4626), satirizing the congress at Aix-la-Chapelle, which also had six editions (counting two American reprints) in 1748.

With the year 1751 we enter upon the pre-classical period of German literature, which goes over into the classical period before the eighth decade is over. The first translation from Gellert comes in 1752, and Rabener's "Satirical letters" appear in 1757, while Bodmer's "Noah" is translated in 1767, Gessner's "Death of Abel" in 1761, his "Pastorals" ("Idyllen") in 1762, Klopstock's "Messiah" in 1763, also his "Death of Adam," Lavater's "Secret journal of a self-observer" in 1770, Lessing's "Laokoön" as early as 1767 (according to Goedeke), Wieland's "Trial of Abraham" in 1764, and Winckelmann's "Reflections on Greek art" in 1765-66. Of other names which bulk somewhat large in these two decades, we might mention that of Bogatzky, with his enormously popular "Golden treasury," also of course Frederick the Great, who remains in the foreground for four decades, and never entirely fades out of our picture (assuming that the ascription to him of the "Matinées royales," see #1996, is correct). The first recorded translation from Goethe is that of "Werther" in 1779. Haller's "Usona" comes out in 1772, the first translation from J. G. Zimmermann, the author of the once passionately admired work on "Solitude," in the same year. The latter work is not issued in English until 1791. The next decade witnesses the first translation from Herder, who remains rather a stepchild in this field; it is his "Tribute to the memory of Ulrich von Hutten," falsely ascribed to Goethe, and published in 1789. Lavater's popular "Aphorisms on man" also appear for the first time in this decade, in 1788. Another work of immense vogue makes its first English appearance at this time: "Munchausen's adventures," first published in 1786. Still another favorite is the autobiography of Frederick Baron Trenck, the German Casanova, which first appeared in 1788. Important new names which appear for the first time in the last decade of the eighteenth century are Gf. August Bürger, whose "Lenore" vies with Schiller's "Lied von der Glocke" as one of the most frequently translated poems (as far as English is concerned) in German literature; Iffland and Kotzebue, once popular dramatists, who took not only their own country but also England by storm; Immanuel Kant; August Lafontaine, the favorite novelist of his day; Friedrich von Schiller; and Heinrich Zschokke, another widely read romancer.

Further analysis of this kind is rendered superfluous by Chart II, which shows at a glance the vogue of a large number of German authors from 1751 down to the present. The method of selecting the data for this chart was a purely empiric one: the compiler merely noted the names of those authors who had at least five items in each of at least two decades. In making this tabulation, each volume of a given work was counted as a unit, and if a number of editions appeared in the same year or decade (e.g., Kotzebue's "Spanier in Peru" in Sheridan's version), each edition was counted as a unit.

It may be of interest to append here the total figures distributed in this chart, in order to see how individual writers compare in the number of publications devoted to them; students with a penchant for statistics may wish to compare these findings with the tabulation given in my prefatory note to List C, where of course the basis for the computation is a totally different one. In both cases, however, Goethe and Schiller head the line, and Goethe so far outstrips the rest as almost to be in a class by himself. I give the first fifty names from Chart II: Goethe (770), Schiller (377), Grimms Märchen (308), Wagner (281), Kotzebue (255), Wyss (181), Heine (144), Fouqué (135), Schmid (131), Muehlbach (121), Humboldt (108), Ebers (106), Werner (101), Zschokke (94), Lessing (90), Spyri (83), Gessner (81), Fz. Hoffmann (78), Nietzsche (76), Marlitt (71), Bogatzky (70), Muenchhausen (69), Gerstaedcker (66), Kant (66), Lafontaine (66), Nieritz (65), Steiner (63), Auerbach (56), Schopenhauer (55), Hauptmann (54), Luther (51), Richter (49), Zimmermann (49), Klopstock (48), Marx (48), Friedrich II (46), Hauff (46), Heyse (45), Sudermann (45), Wieland (45), Barth (44), Schnitzler (44), Heimbürg (43), Niebuhr (43), Freytag (42), E.T.A. Hoffmann (40), Buerger (39), Mommsen (39), and Trenck (38).

In the survey of the earlier periods of my total range which I gave above, the starting point was the publication date of the particular work, the tacit assumption always being that the translation followed fairly closely on the original. While this mostly holds true it is after 1800, to be observed less regularly with respect to earlier centuries, and does not apply at all, of course, to the ages that precede the invention of printing. Consequently I felt moved to look into the appearance in my lists of literary figures who lived prior to the fifteenth century, and ultimately I set up the following rather interesting little table. Column A enumerates those persons who have already been cited in the chronological analysis; column B includes authors who appear only in "Collections," whether in List C or elsewhere; column C embraces only hymn writers, as a special group that might have been included with B; and column D tabulates authors (and some works) that have been found worthy of separate or extended publication in the nineteenth or twentieth century. I shall comment on these names below. The rather surprising number of names in the twelfth and thirteenth centuries is due, of course, to the fact that most of the Minne-singers are represented in the various collections devoted to the early period (cf. C27, C310, C416, C427, C532). Anonymous works of the medieval period which have been reproduced either wholly or in part in modern times, such as "Gudrun," "die Klage," "Nibelungenlied," etc., have been listed in column D, and each is assigned to the century which would correspond to the probable dates of its author.

Column D, of course, interests us most: here are 38 writers of an earlier day who have been "discovered," so to speak, in our age and once more brought to public attention. In a good many cases, to be sure, it is not a predominantly literary interest which has brought about such revivals; but I think it may fairly be said that in the large majority of the cases their appeal is not solely due to their subject matter (what the Germans would call "stoffliches Interesse") but derives at least in part from some sort of literary merit. The names fall rather naturally into four main categories, with one homeless waif left over: Trithem's "Book of secret things." The writings of early travelers: Megiser, Schweinichen, B. Springer, Hans Staden, L. v. Wedel, were doubtless brought out in response to antiquarian and historical values attaching to them, and something similar might be said of the following, who can be regarded as furnishing in the main historical source material: Berlichingen's autobiography (A214; Goethe's "Götz" was very likely a motivating force), Dürer's journals and other writings (interest in a great personality enters in here), Ebo's and Herbord's lives of Otto of Pomerania, Eginhardus's and Notker's lives of Charlemagne (the figure of Charlemagne is of course the drawing card in these cases), Joannes de Hildesheim's "Three kings of Cologne" (historical and literary antiquarianism are both involved), Thomas Platter's autobiography (combines religious interest with the personal touch), and B. Sastrow's "Memoirs," which throw light on the Germany of Luther's day. It is primarily on religious grounds that the next group comes to be translated and published for modern readers, though literary values are by no means lacking, and antiquarian historical interests also are served by numbers of them: we have early mystics and ecstasies -- such as Eckhart and Tauler, Mechtild and Gertrud von Helfde and Mechtild von Magdeburg -- the earliest account of a holy man in Germany, Willibald's life of St. Boniface, poets of religious inspiration, Heinrich von Meissen ("Frauenlob") and Otfried von Weissenburg, and three prophets of the Reformation -- Wessel Gansfort, Martin Luther, and Ulrich Zwingli. Almost at the end of our self-chosen period comes J. Drexel with his "Considerations on eternity." Lastly I cite a group in which literary interest (sometimes with a historical or antiquarian slant) is clearly predominant: "Hildebrandslied" and "Ludwigslied," "Nibelungenlied" and "Klage" belong here, and Pfaffe Lamprecht's "Alexander," the celebrated epics of Gottfried von Strassburg, and Hartmann von Aue, and Wolfram von Eschenbach, the lyrics and aphoristic poems of Walther von der Vogelweide, the Latin dramas of the nun Hrotsuitha, and, as a final literary curiosity, Jakob Ayrer's "Comedy of the beautiful Sidea."

The relative hiatus in translations from the middle period of the nineteenth century, involving such names as Fontane, Grillparzer, Hebbel, Keller, Ludwig, C. F. Meyer, and Storm, and paralleled to a certain extent by the fact that Goethe's death in 1832 was taken as terminal point for a number of the older histories of German literature, was commented on in my first edition and remains similarly obvious in the present one. The tide of translation continued to swell through those years, as my graph shows, but a good deal of its bulk was supplied by mediocre writers or by works outside the field of pure literature. When the naturalistic movement set in on German soil, translations again began to reflect both contemporary interest and literary value, and this trend continues in the main down to the present day. There are few names which are highly regarded in Germany today that do not appear in my lists; and I have the impression that our age will not repeat the passion for popular but essentially ephemeral novels which accounts for the extraordinary vogue of such writers as Ebers, Heimbürg, Marlitt, Mühlbach, and Werner -- to name only those numerically most outstanding.

It may be of interest to note the names which occur most frequently in the postwar lists of translations: Freud (the entire psychoanalytical school enjoys great popularity just now); Goethe (reduced in vogue but still alive as a literary figure, whereas I have not found a single new item or reissue from Schiller in the years 1921-1927); "Grimms Märchen" (their hold seems unshakable); Hauptmann (still to the fore, although the bulk of his important work had been translated before the War); Heine (his popularity apparently not greatly reduced); Hofmannsthal (largely through his operatic texts); Kautsky and Marx (socialistic discussion is of course much in evidence); T. Mann; Nietzsche (the fascination of his much-controverted philosophy strikingly evidenced in the continued publication of his writings in English); Schnitzler (the Viennese cynic and exponent of sex psychology allures even those whom he horrifies); Spyri (the authoress of "Heidi" has been "discovered" as a children's classic and enjoys a popularity similar to that of Barth, Franz Hoffmann, and Nieritz in the nineteenth century); Steiner (the zeal of the sectarian is reflected in the English sale of his works); Wagner (while German opera holds the field Wagner cannot be lost to sight); Wassermann (his ultimate rating may be in dispute, but there can be no doubt of his immediate importance); Werfel (certainly not a "popular" writer, his prominence in my list seems to me quite significant); Wyss (the "Swiss family Robinson" has also become a juvenile classic); Zweig (suggesting somewhat the same comment as in the case of Werfel).

The general trend of translations from the German during the nineteenth and the twentieth centuries is graphically displayed in Chart I, which not only shows, as in my first edition, the cumulative figure for each decade but also enables the interested reader to follow the progress from 1800 to 1927 by single years. I have also prefixed to the decade-graph a line which shows the enormous advance in the number of translations after 1750. Analyzing the nineteenth century by years, we note the peaks in 1845, 1882 and 1884, 1891, 1902, and 1910; these peaks fall in with those of the decade-graph and indicate the likelihood that an explanation for this greater intensity of publication at certain times might be found in general political or social conditions.

Generalization on such matters is always hazardous, and the following suggestions are thrown out for what they may be worth: As for the peak at the end of the eighteenth century, which still holds over into the year 1801, it was due to a variety of causes. There was a marked interest in German literature, partly owing to the connections between English romanticism and German Storm and Stress, partly to dawning recognition of the greatness of Goethe and Schiller; Benjamin Thompson in his German Theatre bears witness to British concern with German drama; and it is not impossible that we have here one result of England's rejection of the French Revolution, which might have encouraged an interest in German life and letters. The largest single factor in this peak, of course, is the extraordinary vogue of Kotzebue.

The sudden leap from the thirties to the forties of the nineteenth century suggests a number of considerations. On the one hand, we note a marked slump in the first two decades of the nineteenth century, which perhaps reflects the economic depression that followed the Napoleonic wars, coupled with some suspicion of German literature as "revolutionary." The subsequent rise may be partly due to the economic recovery and the expansive tendency of the new industrial epoch. Perhaps more important is the new wave of interest in German literature, promoted in England by Carlyle and in America by Emerson and the Transcendentalists. The factors affecting the American situation are carefully studied by Goodnight (B10), who shows that German letters and philosophy enjoyed a marked popularity in this country around 1840, and, what is possibly even more important, were quite as violently attacked in some quarters as they were zealously praised in others.

The peak in the 'eighties almost surely resulted from the phenomenal rise of united Germany to the rank of a great world power, and the consequent focusing of the eyes of the world on her affairs. Here enters in also the insatiable appetite of the American public for narrative literature: witness the vogue of Auerbach, Ebern, Fouqué, Gerstäcker, Hackländer, Hauff, Heimbürg, Heyse, Marlitt, Mühlbach, Werner, Zschokke, not to mention such writers as Barth, Franz Hoffmann, Nieritz, and Schmid, or those juvenile favorites, Grimms' fairy tales and the "Swiss family Robinson." Note that interest in Goethe reached its peak in this period, if these figures are a valid measure of it, and shows a downward tendency since then. It may be remarked in this connection that the translations from Goethe -- multiplied by ten for purposes of comparison and represented on Chart I by the dotted line -- follow the main line decade by decade, with only one exception, the final decade of the eighteenth century. Thus Goethe appears to be something like a barometer for the whole field of German literature in translation.

The decline which set in after 1890 may reflect the growing political tension which was to lead eventually to war. It may also be said that the publication activity of the two previous decades had probably been somewhat abnormal, so that a reaction was almost certain to occur. The rise from 1901-1910, as compared with the preceding decade, was doubtless due in part to interest in Germany's younger and promising writers, perhaps also to determined fostering of friendly relations between Germany and the United States. Before the next decade ended, the war had involved not only the British Empire but also the American republic, so that it is impossible to tell whether the upward trend of the years 1901-1910 would have continued or not. Even now the figures are not entirely self-explanatory. The year-line shows that 1919 marked the bottom of the downward sweep, reaching a figure which we have to go back to the 'thirties to equal, after which the recovery is fairly steady if not very rapid. Should that trend continue -- and there are indications that it is doing so -- then the figure for 1921-1930 forecasts a return to the average level of the half-century preceding the World War, with a possibility that the next following decade will carry the line still higher.

In closing, I wish to reiterate the hope expressed in my first edition that this volume not only may have its own intrinsic value but may stimulate the activity of others along cognate lines: to prepare careful critical bibliographies of special areas in the general field of translation, to fill gaps in the translation literature by making new and acceptable versions of hitherto untranslated or badly translated works, and to aid the literary historian in carrying out studies in comparative literature. If it should also encourage publishers to issue, and readers and librarians to purchase, none but meritorious translations, it will have gone far to justify itself.

MAIN LIST

EXPLANATORY NOTE. In the main, the practice of the LC has been followed in these lists, and it was my aim to give pages and formats wherever they were accessible; during my last extended stay at the British Museum I measured hundreds of books with a centimeter rule in order to increase the accuracy of my data. (However, I did not carry this out in the case of books which I had already seen on previous flying visits to the BM, so that complete consistency was not attained in this respect.) It is to be noted that each of the four main lists referred to in the Introduction has its own system of giving the format -- and one of them differs in giving the paging -- of a book. The LC measures the height of the page in centimeters, adding the width if it is at all unusual. The BM and EC (in earlier periods) employ a series of Latin abbreviations -- fol., 4to, 8vo, 16mo, 18mo, 24mo, 32mo, 64mo -- sometimes adding a further qualification, as Ryl. (royal) 8vo, sq. (square) 12 mo, obl. (oblong) 4to, sm. (small) 4to, and the like. These terms originally signified the number of folds made in a standard sheet of paper to secure the page used in a particular book, but are now more commonly read as indicating the approximate size of the volume; this has led to some confusion, and it not infrequently happens that the same book is given by BM as 8vo and by EC as 12mo and vice versa. (For this reason I advocate the adoption of LC practice.) In recent issues, EC has taken to giving, besides the conventional 8vo or 12mo, the size of the page in inches; I have taken these figures with regard to recent books which I have not seen. The AC, which in earlier issues used the conventional abbreviations, subsequently adopted its own system, whereby the book sizes are designated by a series of letters: D, O, T, etc. I have perforce taken these symbols when AC was my only source of information. As to paging, LC and AC (now) give preface or introduction in small Roman figures, whereas EC adds such a figure to that of the Arabic paging of the book; this has frequently been a considerable disadvantage to me, as it made it impossible to identify with certainty a given edition. I must also plead guilty to inconsistency with respect to paging: In my first edition, I ignored prefaces, and gave merely the Arabic figures; in preparing my second edition, realizing that such figures are often quite valuable and in some cases indispensable, I began to put them in. But since I did not make this decision until part of the material had been assembled it was no longer possible to carry the scheme through without gaps. My failure to list a preface in a particular case is therefore not absolute proof that the book has none. On the other hand, I hope to earn the gratitude of co-workers for supplying the publisher and paging in the cases of hundreds of books listed in the BM catalog without specification of either one. In the cases of works which appeared in many editions, e.g., Goethe's "Werther," Gessner's "Death of Abel," etc., I have given data also regarding illustrations, comparative paging, and the like which may facilitate the identification of editions in other libraries. With regard to the dating of books, there are certain discrepancies which can probably not be avoided. One type of divergence grows out of the practice of announcing publication in advance of the actual appearance of the book; this leads to the listing of a certain book for 1848, for instance, although it did not actually come into the market until 1849 and bears that date on the title page. More perplexing to me were a number of cases in which the EC lists a certain book as of 1849 let us say, whereas the copy in BM is dated 1848; I have found no explanation of this. In general, I have assumed identity in such cases, usually indicating the divergence in a note. In the listing of undated books carried in earlier issues of the AC (Roorbach and Kelly), I have adopted a different plan in the new edition: instead of referring to the particular volume of AC, I have given the date-range, which is usually not very great; the information thus afforded for the first period, 1820-1852, is, however, not at all satisfactory, and the best I could do was to state that the book must have come out "before 1852."

The use of serial numbers in the following lists is a purely practical device, indispensable in making up the index of translators, as also in the cross-referencing which I have carried out rather extensively. Nowhere has the fallibility of the human mind been more painfully impressed upon me than in my desperate but vain struggles to keep the sequence of these numbers straight; here, as in the first edition, I have been repeatedly forced to have recourse to the device of appended letters, since the correction of a slip in any other way would have involved an inordinate amount of renumbering, with risk of probable errors of a different kind.

A special note is in order with regard to LCO. In the spring of 1917, when I did the bulk of my work on the first edition at the LC, there were still upwards of 200,000 handwritten cards in the so-called Old Catalog, representing volumes that had not yet been recatalogued and so did not appear among the printed cards. Many of these cards, however, stood for books that had been lost in the meantime and that therefore never will appear in the printed catalog. To a considerable extent this still held true in 1927, when I again spent several weeks in the LC; such titles bear the designation LCO.

The following library and catalog abbreviations are used, indicating in most cases that I obtained my information directly from and in that library: ABP, American Books in Print (1912, in some cases 1876); AC, American (Publishers') Catalog; BM, British Museum (refers to the catalog there), BMM, Music Catalog of the British Museum; BPL, Boston Public Library; CU, Columbia University Library; EC, English (Publishers') Catalog, including earlier issues back to 1800; HCL, Harvard College Library; LC, Library of Congress, LCO, see above, LCM, Music Division of the Library of Congress; NL, Newberry Library (not visited); NY, New York Public Library; SU, Stanford University, UCal, University of California (not visited); UW, University of Wisconsin. In listing some references from Evans (B6u) I have taken over his notation as to where the book can be found but have given this information in a note. If my only source of information is a bibliography (see list B, page 574), then the reference is given thus: (B6a). In the same way I have handled information gleaned from LC cards, which sometimes say, for example, "first edition 1876." In a few instances I bought some of the Little Blue Books (Haldeman-Julius) to get the detail on them; such entries are followed by: (BQM). In the new edition I have always assigned a book to both LC and BM if I was certain of its being housed there; but since I have not visited the LC since my work at the BM was done, the absence of the LC notation after a book is not definite proof that LC does not have it.

¹At the very end of this study, after the revised MS had been typed, I stumbled quite by accident upon a special Appendix to the EC for 1835-1862 -- English books printed on the Continent. It is the only volume of the EC, I believe, which contains such a supplement. From it I gleaned several new titles and a considerable number of new editions.

Other abbreviations frequently used are:

abr., abridged	n.i., no imprint
ad., adapted, adaptation	p., pages
ca., circa	pl., plate(s)
corr., corrected	port., portrait
d., died	pt., part
ed., edition, edited	rev., revised ff., folios (used in case of older books or unpagged modern books)	s.sh., single sheet
fl., flourished	sel., selected, selection
front., frontispiece	seq., and following page(s)
il., illustrated, illustration(s)	t.p., title page
l., leave(s)	tr., translated by, translation, translator libr., libretto	tw., typewritten
L., London	unb., unbound
n.d., no date	unp., unpagged
	v., volume(s)

The symbol do. (ditto) normally signifies identity of the German original, while "same" refers to the translation, or even, if no other information is given, to the edition, with publisher, paging, etc. In a number of instances, however, do. refers to the translator or editor just named, and in other cases to the identity of German and English title. In listing the numbers of books given in List C which contain selections from a given author, I have starred those which contain a considerable amount of the writer's work, usually setting the line at 10 poems (or pages), but sometimes in special cases going below that figure.

Abbreviations of German given names are listed below; for abbreviations of English given names see the explanatory note to the index of translators, page 631

¹For a careful and probably definitive study of the authorship of this curious document, see an article by Lionel Giles in "The Library," April 1902, p. 148 seq. Giles comes to the conclusion that Frederick actually was the author, and that there are six "Matinées" in the original, which has been lost. A seventh "Matinee" on finance, which crept in around 1800, is probably a forgery; and one on manners and gallantry, which made its first appearance in a French ed. of 1871, is also a forgery.

¹The actual claim of the Baron to the authorship of the stories which commonly go by the name "Munchausen," while the complete facts cannot be ascertained, appears to be rather slight. In the Vademecum für lustige Leute, Berlin 1781, there appeared 18 stories, most if not all of which derived from M--'s big tales to his friends. These were very terse, hardly more than anecdotes. It has been suggested that they were put to paper by Rd. Er. Raspe, but from the "Nachwort" by Dr. Er. Ebstein in the ed. issued by the Gesellschaft der Bibliophilen in Weimar (1925), I am strongly inclined to believe that the writer of them was Bürger, who did in fact publish two editions of the work, with additions that can be ascribed only to him. Seventeen stories from the Vademecum were tr. into Engl. by Raspe, who elaborated on them considerably. This coll. went into a 2d ed. in 1786. On it Bürger based his first ed. of the stories, retaining Raspe's elaborations and adding some of his own, and also adding 8 further stories to Raspe's 17. In 1788 Bürger published a 2d ed., which contained 7 further stories; these 7 are not found in the English ed. of 1787.

This perhaps written by Geisweiler himself? Travels pub. under the names of Taurinius and Damberger were fictitious, written up from other books and his imagination.  on an undated Antwerp ed. ca. 1520-30, which contains about half of the orig. Ouvry thinks this date and the preceding one are both too early, as Copland did his printing on Fleet Street up to 1557, and later moved to the "Vintry on the 3 craned wharf," as in the colophon of these eds. Probably 1560 more nearly correct.] [BM]

¹In my first edition I omitted Caxton's tr. of the old epic, thinking it to be without connection with German literature. Further study has caused me to view the matter differently. In French versions of the story, Reynard is outwitted by the raven, the cat, and the sparrow; in Germanic ones, the wolf and his injuries occupy the centre of interest, and this agrees with the Latin. Caxton's tale is at all events Germanic, and while the story of Reynard lies somewhat to one side, I think it not improper to include it.--For another treatment of the story, See Goethe's "Reineke Fuchs."

LIST C. COLLECTIONS

This list, besides containing an increase of more than 300 over its predecessor, shows also a radical innovation in its technique: I have hoped to earn the gratitude of future bibliographers, compilers, and students, by registering the contents of all the volumes to which I could gain access. Many of the indices to these volumes are lacking in accuracy of ascription or spelling, so that these data cannot be guaranteed, the less so that my own transcriptions of these flocks of names and initials are subject to error in both writing and subsequent reading. However, I have thought it worthwhile to assume that risk. It seems to me not only that these name-lists may have some value for specialists but that they are not uninteresting from the point of view of their selection and distribution. My earliest plan, that of listing all the individual poems involved, I gave up as inhumanly difficult of execution, but not until some 11000 cards had been made out (taken only from the books available on this side of the Atlantic). Such studies may some time be attempted for individual authors (as has been done for Goethe at Wisconsin); then the analyses here presented should prove useful as a starting point for further research.

The preparation of these indices suggested one inquiry that could be pursued with relative ease, namely as to the frequency of occurrence of the various poets in these collections. No value attaches to the appended sequences; but I find them interesting, and possibly others may agree. I have set up two sequences, in fact: one based on the range of the poet, i.e., the number of separate volumes in which selections from him are printed; the other based on a rough computation of the aggregate amount of such selections (counting either a poem or a page as one). The figures in parentheses are hundreds; they indicate that in both frequency and range Goethe far outstrips all others, and that Schiller, Heine, and Uhland stand with Goethe in a group by themselves. It was not possible to distinguish between prose and verse in these computations; hence the relatively high frequency of Lessing, Luther, Richter, Tieck, Kant, etc. Tersteegen and Gerhardt owe their position to the large number of hymnals, as well as to other volumes which stress religious poetry. Interesting is the high rank of Walther von der Vogelweide, who easily leads the Minnesingers, followed at a long distance by Ulrich von Lichtenstein and Heinrich von Morungen. Of more modern poets, Dehmel leads, followed by Liliencron and Hofmannsthal; but none of these achieved the minimum of 10 necessary for inclusion in the range-sequence.

INDEX OF TRANSLATORS

INDEX OF TRANSLATORS

Note. --This list serves in the main a double purpose. On the one hand it has its face value, so to speak; on the other, it will help to make up for deficiencies in the critical judgments of the main list. Thus if a book is translated by E. A. Bowring, for example, the reader can get an approximate idea of its quality by noting in this list the ratings assigned to other translations done by him.

LC cards give the dates of translators as far as they are known, and I have followed that practice here; BM, however, prints no dates, and many could not be found. In order to give some idea of the translator's period, the publication date of the earliest translation recorded in this book is inserted in parentheses after the name, with A, E, or G prefixed, to indicate publication in America, England, or Germany, respectively.

The numbers, of course, refer to the main list, and to lists A (p.551), and C (p.577), and are assigned mostly the same diacritical marks as are given in these lists. Occasionally a double mark is given here, to indicate varying quality of the translator's work, as determined by examination of particular selections.

Abbreviations include those of the AC (A: for Augustus, B: for Benjamin, etc., as in those of German names), those which can be used for both English and German (Ab. for Albert, Tb. for Theobald, Pl. for Paul, etc.), and a few others easily recognizable: e.g., Cath. for Catherine, Eli. for Elizabeth, Pes. for Frances, Fis. for Francis, Sa. for Sarah. In a few cases certain abbreviations are given in my bibliographical sources; I cannot always be certain what these stand for.
